

1. It was a peace agreement between several European countries. The main ones involved were England, France, the Holy Roman Empire, and Spain. This treaty was meant to stop them from fighting each other and create peace in Europe.
2. The treaty included a part about defending each other. If any country that signed the treaty was attacked, the others promised to help defend it. This was supposed to make countries less likely to start wars because they would have to fight against lots of other countries.
